We have examined the PCO draft and find it accurate and adequate for the purpose intended.

It suggest a frank approach in keeping with the mores of today's society but at the same time reinforces the security considerations as outlined in CD 35 which as this document insists, takes precedence. Another important consideration is that it should serve to appease the growing militancy of liberal thought in this complex and delicate area of character behaviour by having more consistency throughout Government.

In essence this document will not change our direction nor detract for our responsibility in these type of investigations.
